PART 1: THE TRUTH ABOUT SHRINKING

You Weren't Born This Way

There was a moment—maybe many moments—when you learned that your needs weren't safe.

Your nervous system is in chronic survival mode. It's flooding your system with cortisol every time he withdraws.

The exhausting part? This never actually keeps you safe. It just trains him to take everything while giving nothing back.

Your Nervous System Is Trying to Survive

When you suppress a need, your nervous system registers it as a threat. This is why you experience:

Physical: Heart racing, insomnia, chest tightness, nausea, exhaustion

Emotional: Hypervigilance, shame, rage, numbness, desperation

Behavioral: Phone obsession, over-functioning, people-pleasing, constant reassurance-seeking

This isn't weakness. This is your body in survival mode.

PART 2: THE 3-DAY NERVOUS SYSTEM RESET

How This Works

Your nervous system learned: "I'm only safe when I'm invisible."

This reset teaches: "I'm safe when I listen to myself and act on what I know."

When you honor your own needs, your vagus nerve shifts from threat/survival to rest/safety.

DAY 1: THE MIRROR (Notice Without Shame)

Write down one moment where you wanted to speak but didn't. One time you said yes when you meant no. One feeling you suppressed.

Your nervous system needs to know: You're paying attention.

DAY 2: THE BOUNDARY (One Small Act)

Pick ONE:

- Wait 1 hour before responding to his texts
- Ask for something you normally wouldn't say
- Say "no" or "let me think about that"
- Give yourself reassurance instead of seeking his

Your nervous system learns: I get to decide what happens to my time/energy.

DAY 3: THE INTEGRATION (Making It Real)

Tell one trusted person what you've learned. Say it out loud.

When you speak truth to another person, your nervous system registers it as TRUE.

WHAT CHANGES AFTER 3 DAYS

Your Nervous System Has New Data

It learned:

- You can survive with your own needs
- Honoring yourself doesn't lead to abandonment
- You're stronger than you thought
- You can self-soothe
- Speaking truth makes you stronger

What You'll Notice

Physical: Easier breathing, better sleep, more energy, clearer thinking

Emotional: Less shame, more clarity, lighter feeling, strength

Relational: Either he respects the change (and rises) or you see he won't

This is the beginning, not the end. But it's where freedom starts.
