THE FOUNDATION: Understanding the Cycle

Avoidant Attachment: His Side

Avoidant attachment forms when emotional needs go unmet in childhood. His nervous system learned:
"Needing anyone = danger."

His survival rule: "I'm only safe when I'm completely independent."

When intimacy increases, his nervous system sounds the alarm: THREAT. His body floods with adrenaline. He withdraws to feel safe.

Anxious Attachment: Your Side

You learned: "I'm only safe when I'm needed. When I'm small and accommodating."

When he pulls away, your nervous system reads it as abandonment. You panic. You chase. You shrink more.

The Dance

He withdraws to feel safe. You chase to feel safe. You're both making it worse.

The Cost

To your body: Sleep disruption, digestive issues, chronic pain, accelerated aging, weakened immunity

To your mind: Loss of identity, depression, anxiety disorder, shame, rage

To the relationship: No real intimacy, eroded trust, resentment, deeper cycle

THE BINARY TRUTH

There are only two outcomes in this dynamic:

OUTCOME 1: HE WAKES UP

His nervous system gets safe. He does the work. He becomes available. Real intimacy becomes possible.

For this: He must admit the problem, want to change, get help, follow through.

OUTCOME 2: HE DOESN'T

He keeps doing what works. You stay in pain or you leave.

There is no middle ground where you shrink and he suddenly becomes secure.

THE QUESTION THAT CHANGES EVERYTHING:

"Is he showing any signs of being willing to change?"

This question determines everything.

THE 47 SCRIPTS: Overview

Script Set 1: When He Pulls Away (Slow replies, sudden distance)

Script Set 2: When He Shuts Down Mid-Conversation

Script Set 3: When He Ghosts or Disappears

Script Set 4: When He Says You're "Too Much"

Script Set 5: Setting Your First Real Boundary

Script Set 6: The Clarity Conversation (Most important)

Script Set 7: Leaving With Dignity

Script Set 8-10: Advanced Scenarios

HOW THE SCRIPTS WORK

They do three things:

1. Name reality without theory or blame
2. State your boundary without apology
3. Give him information so he can choose

When you speak your truth:

- Your nervous system shifts from fight/flight to rest/digest
- Your rational brain comes back online
- You stop operating from desperation
- You show: "I can handle this. I don't need to collapse."

The psychology is neuroscience-based. The power is in the honesty.

THE BINARY QUESTION: Can He Actually Change?

Three Questions That Answer Everything:

Question 1: Is he willing to admit there's a problem?

YES = He acknowledges the pattern is hurting you both

NO = He blames you, denies it, or says "this is just who I am"

Question 2: Is he taking action to address it?

YES = Therapy, reading, inner work, consistency

NO = He says he'll work on it but does nothing

Question 3: Is he showing up differently?

YES = Concrete behavior changes (responds faster, engages, shows interest)

NO = Everything's the same, just promised words

WHAT THE ANSWERS MEAN:

All three YES = He can change. This is worth staying for.

Two YES, one NO = He's trying but something's missing. Give 8 weeks. If stalled, he's not willing.

One YES, two NO = He's not actually willing. Leave.

All three NO = He's clearly not interested. Leave immediately.

STAY WITH BOUNDARIES OR LEAVE: The Decision

IF HE'S WILLING: Rebuilding With Boundaries

Slow: Nervous systems take 6-18 months to rewire

Not linear: He'll have setbacks and regressions

Requires both: You can't do his work for him

Your job:

- Stop shrinking (model health)
- Keep boundaries (don't go backward)
- Hold him accountable (gently name regressions)
- Get support (therapy, friends, community)
- Believe change is possible but not guaranteed

Reality check at 8 weeks: Is he in therapy? Behavior changed? Acknowledging patterns? Willing to be uncomfortable? Am I safer or just hiding better?

IF HE'S NOT WILLING: Leave With Dignity

Leaving is not dramatic. It's quiet and powerful.

Step 1: Make the decision (after the Clarity Conversation)

Step 2: Get support (tell one trusted person)

Step 3: Make a practical plan (where, when, how)

Step 4: Send the script (or have the conversation)

Step 5: Don't explain or justify

Step 6: Follow through (actually leave)

The script:

"I've made a decision. I'm leaving. This isn't negotiable. I'm telling you out of respect. I'm taking [timeframe] to get my things. After that, I'm gone."

That's it. You owe him nothing more.

THE LAST TRUTH

It was never that you were too much.

It was that safety was never truly available.

Your needs aren't the problem. The refusal to meet them is.

Your voice isn't too loud. It's been silenced for so long.

Your body isn't too much to love. It's asking for someone who actually loves it.

You are exactly right.

For someone willing to show up.

The question isn't how to make yourself smaller.

The question is:

Are YOU worth honoring?

Because the answer is always yes.
